IN A unique Rakshabandhan celebration, students of Vishwakarma University tied rakhis on trees at their campus, taking a pledge to protect the environment. The event, called Vrukshabandhan, was part of the university's ongoing efforts to address climate change and promote sustainable practices.

In the initiative organised by the university's Student Welfare Association, rakhis were made from waste and leftover decorative material. Professor Vaibhav Thakare, director of Student Welfare, highlighted that the rakhis were handmade by the Abhivyakti wing of the student council, reflecting the university's commitment to sustainability.

"Through Vrukshabandhan, we hope to inspire our students to take concrete actions in preserving our environment," Thakare said.

Clifford Gumireshe, a second-year student from Zimbabwe in the Department of Travel and Tourism, wrote the pledge for the event. He emphasised the global impact of climate change, stating, "Climate change has transborder effects. It's time for the entire human race to come together to protect the planet."
